

Transcript of Audio Clip with Alice Wylde

Interviewer: What were your daily duties? What did you do?

Alice: Well, writing in a book and having to know where every man was – every man on the watches what they were doing and where they had to go. If they were off or on and if there was a raid and there was a fire or something you had to know what appliance to send out to what particular fire, you know, heavy units for big fires and stirrup pump things for small fires. We had to learn about gasses – all gasses and what not. So it was quite exciting.
