

Transcript of Audio Clip with Kenneth Taylor

Interviewer: Once you were demobbed how – how was it adjusting back to life in – in Broadstairs?

Kenneth: Well, it was quite different because, I mean, there was no sort of do this and do that and you had no sort of, what shall I say, discipline. If you wanted to lie in bed or not go work or not do anything but you could. It took quite some time, you know, to realise that you wanted to sort of back in call and you got to do this and you got to do that. So, I said, it was alright when you first came home but then after a few weeks you sort of got fed up with nothing to do. So actually I started looking round and I started work, I think, was about a month before I was actually – the date of the demob was finished. I couldn't stand, you know, the rest of the time cos I think I would [unclear] time August, yeah, August till October. End of August so there was September, nearly two months leave I had but eight weeks doing next to nothing and you got to be fed up [laughs].
