I was called up to the Royal West Kents, I think they were called. They had the nickname La Bassée. I went to Canterbury. Before I was eighteen you had a medical and that was pretty crude because it was in a hall in Lee Green and dotted around, it was a Church Hall I think, were various doctors. You started off by stripping down and you went to each of these doctors – naked. One would be looking at yours eyes and other particulars, you know, and you walked in and that was my introduction to Army life in a way.
