

Transcript of Audio Clip with Walter Bellsham

So as a lad, as lads, there was three of us, just three boys, we were the only boys that were left in this area. We never went to school for two years and we were great friends. I'm a buil – I turned out to become a builder, one became an architect and the other one I think he was a surveyor, something like that, you know. The connection being that a lot of properties were damaged so it was a natural thing for boys to think, well, you know, to work the hands if you – you know, to sort of follow that sort of thing.
